

Being Relocated to New York City for Work – How to Find the Ideal Place and Settle in Fast

Getting a job transfer is always an exciting moment, especially when that transfer comes hand-in-hand with new job opportunities or a promotion. Even if the transfer isn't meant to be permanent, it can still be a very big time in your career. Of course, that moment becomes all the more exciting and impactful when the transfer takes you to the largest city in the country – New York City – the city where dreams are made. Just the thought of moving to the Big Apple is more than many people can even handle.

But as that excitement starts to settle in and wear off, the realities of the move will start to hit. Obviously, you want to hit the ground running the moment you arrive in NYC so that your job transfer is seamless. The last thing you want to worry about is where you're going to live and how long it's going to take you to settle in and feel organized.

Not to worry, as we have some fabulous tips for newcomers to the city that need to be productive from the moment they arrive.

Be Specific Where You Want to Live

The first step is to think about what the best location would be for you. If you need to be visiting clients and going to an office daily, then obviously you want to be located nearby so your commute isn't too long. If the majority of your work will be done remotely from your apartment, then location may not be as high on the list of priorities.

Opt for a Furnished Apartment

One of the best tips out there is to look for furnished apartments in NY. Companies like Blueground feature a massive list of apartments, all of which allow you to be productive from the moment you arrive. There will be no such thing as that transition period, which means your job won't suffer or be interrupted.

Some of the highlights include the fact their premium properties can be found in some of the most in-demand areas of the city. And for anyone who knows New York City, they know how hard a good apartment is to find in a great neighborhood.

So, not only will you be located in the ideal neighborhood, but there's no need to ship your furniture to the city or have the hassle of buying all new items. Instead, the apartments come pre-furnished in some of the most beautiful, modern, and comfortable décor you'll find.

If it's upgrades that you're after, you can also find them.

Maybe you want to be sure the building has a doorman for extra security, an elevator to make it easy to get up and down, an on-site pool, or perhaps it needs to be pet-friendly. You can specify exactly what you're after, including the size and neighborhood. This style of apartment is booked as a monthly stay, so it doesn't matter if you're here for the short or long-term.

Give Yourself Time to Be a Tourist

Now that you've found an apartment, the next step is to settle in – and fast. The last thing you want to do is get lost heading to work, client meetings, trying to find a nearby grocery store or gym. So, go ahead and give yourself time to be a tourist. Maybe spend that first week or two just getting to know the city and your neighborhood.

If you have any contacts in the new office you will be working out of, maybe connect with one of them and ask if they can show you around. This is a great way to get a feel for the city and amenities nearby.

It's also a good idea to take a few practice runs on your commute to the office, just so that you can plan your route and the timing. You don't want to be late for your first day!

Get Familiar with the Public Transit System

The New York public transit system is quite well-known and is used by millions and millions of people each and every day. If you plan on using it for work or just getting around, now is the time to familiarize yourself with the routes and schedules. A MetroCard may be a good option if you plan on using public transit often. It covers the NYC Transit subways, local buses, select buses, and express buses. It also includes the Staten Island Railway.

You're Ready to Jump Right In

With these tips and advice, you'll find that you'll be able to quickly find that ideal apartment and settle in fast, allowing you to focus on your new job and excelling in your career.
