

Help Your Teenager Help Others

Happiness derived from tasks that help others, like raising money for a charity, could be better for teen mental health than happiness derived from selfish activities, like eating chocolate or listening to music. Empirical psychological studies have indicated that, over time, eudaimonic activities tend to be beneficial to mental health while hedonic activities can be harmful to it.