

Young People's Friendships Affect Their Health Later On

What's particularly important, regardless of how old you are, is to surround yourself with as many good friends as you can find, as a wide body of research links poor social connections with early mortality.