Astrology Overview for Oct 30-Nov 05, 2017

The week begins with Venus still squaring Pluto. An issue of fairness in a relationship may need careful handling, but more fortuitously the Sun continues side-by-side with Jupiter for one more day. However, the Sun from Tuesday goes on to forge a beautiful link with Neptune through to the end of the week. This is going to be wonderful in terms of imagination, using our perception, and tuning into our 6th senses. This can also be an aspect which encourages us to be compassionate and be attuned to help those who are less fortunate, both emotionally and practically.

All week Mars also continues to forge a fantastic link to Jupiter. Now, when these two get together in any combination is positive, they can give us a sense that anything is possible, but with Mars in detriment in the sign of Libra, our enthusiasms need to be governed by what works well for other people as well as ourselves.

Venus is also very influential at the end of this week, forging a great angle with Saturn which is very stabilising in a positive relationship, but a much more challenging opposition with Uranus. This second influence could see us restless in any tie which is not working so well. The need for greater variety stimulation can call out to us, and even a long-standing relationship which is basically sound may need rejuvenating or reinventing in some kind of way.

The Full Moon on Saturday in Taurus, is also governed by Venus being the ruler of Taurus and whilst at a practical level this can be about marshalling our resources effectively both in the short and longer terms, equally it can be about our connections to others in both a physical and also more everyday way.
