As soon as summer is over and the students go back to school. You can be sure that the content you read during their summer break will impact your behavior in school positively. It will give you the drive you need to influence change in your school and community.

Here are some ways that you as an activist can impact your surrounding:

1. Finding your voice

Once you read about different topics, you will automatically start asking yourself questions such as, what does this issue entail? If I was this character, what would I do in this situation? Doing so will drive you to speak up on a particular topic. The books push you to act when needed knowing the outcome of an issue and the problems it might cause. It makes you stay aware of your environment and adds value to how you view the world.

2. Speak up

A lot of cruel things happen in our day-to-day activities. Whether it is bullying, mistreatment, or racism. Books help motivate you to speak out about them. It might be through writing your book that addresses matters in society, knowing that books inspire people. Or it could be a podcast that addresses change in the community. Either way, you will be able to speak up, full of confidence, and bring change to the community at large. Here are some novels that might help motivate you to speak out:

1. Count me in
2. Strange bird
3. Dress code

All these books will inspire you not to stay quiet when something is going wrong.

3. Present and past understanding.

To bring about change, you require knowledge of the roots of the issue. You need to know how the matter came to be to understand how to stop it. Books take you back to the 90s, where you get to know the problems people faced and how they occurred. Here are some books to inspire you:

1. Stamped (kids version)
2. Finish the fight
