

Will We Choose Freedom Or Fascism?

By Julian Rose | Waking Times

Here we are. No more speculation about 'what awaits around the corner'; the jail keepers are escorting us down the concrete corridor and the cell keys are hanging from his belt. Each one of us, in turn, convicted – without notice and without trial – of being Human and electing to express ourselves accordingly. That is the new definition of 'terrorist'.

The battle lines are drawn; there is no other way to honestly state it, we are in the fight of – and for – our lives. We go forward, with the courage and conviction which comes with refusing to be derailed from the path of truth. Or, capitulate to the central control system and fall into a very dark pit from which there is no charted escape.

We shall know each other by the caliber of our actions. We do not have to wear a badge announcing 'the resistance'. The army that we are becoming is forming organically. No uniform required, no 'uniformity' visible. We know our task and do not need to wait for a command.

We are aware of the composition of the war being waged upon us. And we are aware of being susceptible to certain elements of its dark agenda. So we know we have to rid ourselves of those vulnerabilities in order to come out on top. That is the first lesson in the art of this form of warfare. A warrior without self-discipline and self-awareness is a lost cause.

Confronting an often invisible enemy is a new game. Yet a key component of our repressor's armory draws upon weaponized digital, algorithmic, and irradiating technologies. One deals with these by withdrawing one's allegiance to the tools and practices of a mind-controlling 'convenience' culture.

The tyranny which is now directly manifesting has taken hold as a result of the inability, or unwillingness, of those in positions of responsibility to break the top-down anti-life chain of command and stand firm for truth and justice. Fear and bribery are the main tools being exerted to silence those who should not be silent.

This is leading to the complete capitulation – amongst all categories of 'officers of the state' – to maintain integrity, responsibility, and the imperative to uphold fundamentally civilized moral standards.

Yet there are many awakening to the realization of their imprisonment. For some, this provokes a desire to seek shelter from the storm and, if possible, to turn a blind eye to recognize the degree to which their imprisonment stretches out into all corners of their daily lives. But others, sensing the profound implications of what lies in store should they not take action, turn to face the music and become warriors in the cause of justice, truth, and liberty.

Now the beauty of turning to face the music, is that an unseen cosmic element immediately provides support in the mission one has chosen to undertake. Whereas for those who try to hide, no such propitious event occurs.

Choosing freedom makes one powerful. But carries with it a keen sense of responsibility to 'practice as one preaches'. It is not really possible to ditch all one's bad habits in one go, as those starting out on the conscious path find out. But it is possible, and absolutely necessary, to act on one's key digressions without delay.

Making the decision to oppose the ways of the deep state and its corporate globalization spider's web cannot involve resisting it with one hand and supporting it with the other. That is the road to somewhere worse than nowhere and the antithesis of the warrior's path.

In order to ensure continuity between one's words and one's actions, one needs to take a quick scan of those daily routines that are not in line with one's determination to stand for justice, truth, and liberty.

The most obvious priorities, given the nature of our oppressors, are to withdraw one's support (money) from the major banks; one's food purchasing from the major supermarkets, and one's medicines from the major pharmaceutical companies. Other steps will follow, but without starting by withdrawing one's support for these great behemoths of rampant social, ecological, and economic degradation, can one really say that one is standing against fascism and for freedom?

The dictatorship descending upon us – using the alibi of the current COVID chimera – provides the starkest opportunity most will ever have to turn to face the music. It is exactly the right catalyst to make one see, or at least seek, the truth – and then act on it.

The intentional chaos now manifesting is our wake-up call. The preplanned 'order out of chaos' is the imposition of a fascist state; it's that simple. And we have plenty of time to recognize the symptoms.

Every artery of society, in whatever part of the (post) industrialized 'democratic' world one might live in, has been steadily poisoned by the social engineering, predictive planning, and creeping technocratic agenda emanating from the deep state's global ambition to rule the world. An ambition held earlier by the backers of Hitler in Nazi Germany, Franco in Spain Mussolini in Italy, and Stalin in Russia – to name a few.

Our political institutions have capitulated to the blueprint of the Fourth Reich and most of the population has gone along with them, not realizing what agenda is being played out.

The leading edge of the 'new' fascism is not an army of occupation, but a digital re-programming of the human mind. A technological toxic blanket of 'virtual' control separating man from nature, thus destroying the foundations of human evolution.

We who are now joining together, are doing so to create an army able to resist and turn around this cult of death. That's why our own integrity in 'practicing as we preach' is so vital. We must use our powers of discrimination to see through our own vacillations and to dump the supposed 'conveniences' that undermine and delay our active commitment to respond to the key imperatives of our time.

Then, slowly but surely, the compromises that detour us from our goal – only to refresh the pockets of those we claim to be fighting – will be deleted and done away with. The integrated beings who emerge via successfully battling with their own vicissitudes will be the only ones capable of taking on the seemingly immovable oppressors of this planet, its peoples, and all the living entities that comprise its vast diversity.

The emancipation of all these rests upon the courage and voracity we invest in harnessing our inner and outer drives for integrity and truth. That is what it actually means to choose freedom over fascism.

About the Author

Julian Rose is an early pioneer of UK organic farming, writer, international activist, entrepreneur, and teacher. His latest book 'Overcoming the Robotic Mind – Why Humanity Must Come Through' is particularly prescient reading for this time: see www.julianrose.info